Abstract:

The prevalence of obesity is a global health problem. Obesity or abnormal fat accumulation is a risk factor for many disease including heart related disorders and many others. Proper designed diet is a preliminary treatment mainly focuses on reduced food intake. Commiphora mukul is also known as guggul tree and is largely located in drought areas of Pakistan, Bangladesh and India. Principal ingredient Guggulu is a part of several ayurvedic formulations used for controlling obesity. Commiphora mukul contains longchain aliphatic tetrols, starches, diterpenoids, steroids, triterpenoids, aliphatic esters, lignans, ferulates, and an assortment of inorganic particles other than minor measures of sesamin and some unidentified constituents. Here authors have evaluated the anti-obesity potential of Commiphora mukul and found promising results which indicate medicinal benefits of Commiphora mukul in treatment of obesity.

INTRODUCTION:

The World Health Organization (WHO) has identified four major risk factors for the diseases; use of tobacco, physical inactivity, improper and unhealthy diet, and the excessive use of alcohol. Among these the physical inactivity and improper and unhealthy diet, typically find their expression in overweight and obesity. Worldwide, it is found that the prevalence rate for obesity between 1980 and 2013 was increased up to 28 % in adults and 47% in children, and about 2.1 billion persons were considered as obese [1]. Although, the increased rate was found both in developed as well as developing countries, yet it was comparatively higher in developed countries. It was amazing to analyze that the males were more obese than the females in

Ischemic heart disease, cancer, and stroke are the leading causes of death worldwide, in recent years. These diseases are related to the “epidemic of obesity,” one of the major global health concerns. Due to high-calorie diet and sedentary lifestyle, obesity is highly prevalent. Obesity is a chronic disease in the same sense as hypertension and atherosclerosis. The etiology or cause of obesity is an imbalance between the energy ingested in food and the energy expended. The excess energy is stored in fat cells that enlarge and/or increase in number. Capparis spinosa is an economical species in the Caparidaceae family with high medicinal values and play a pivotal role in traditional health care system. Studies have revealed the presence of phenolics, alkaloids, flavonoids (kaempferol, rutin, quercetin), glucosinolates (glucobrassicin, glucoiberin, glucocapparin, sinigrin), antioxidants, carotenoids, terpenoids and essential oils in different parts of the Capparis spinosa. The aqueous extracts of aerial parts of Capparis spinosa for its protective effect against the paracetamol and carbonyl trichloride induced hepatotoxicity in rats. Study revealed that acute toxicity and free radical scavenging activity. Two groups, each containing 3 animals were randomly selected for the treatment with hydroalcoholic and ethanol extract of Capparis spinosa leaves. Results showed that hydroalcoholic & ethanolic extract of Capparis spinosa leaves on high fat induced obesity was reduced.

Introduction

Ischemic heart disease, cancer, and stroke are the leading causes of death worldwide, in recent years. These diseases are related to the “epidemic of obesity,” one of the major global health concerns. Due to high-calorie diet and sedentary lifestyle, obesity is highly prevalent [1]. Obesity generally is defined as excess body fat. The definition of excess, however, is not clear-cut. Adiposity is a continuous trait not marked by a clear division into normal and abnormal. Moreover, it is difficult to measure body fat directly. Consequently, obesity often is defined as excess body weight rather than as excess fat. In epidemiologic studies, body mass index (BMI) calculated as weight in kilograms divided by height in meters squared is used to express weight adjusted for height [2]. Obesity is a chronic disease in the same sense as hypertension and atherosclerosis. The etiology or cause of obesity is an imbalance between the energy ingested in food and the energy expended. The excess energy is stored in fat cells that enlarge and/or increase in number. It is this hyperplasia and hypertrophy of fat cells that is the pathological lesion of obesity. Enlarged fat cells produce the clinical problems associated with obesity either because of either the weight or mass of the extra fat or because of the increased secretion of free fatty acids and numerous peptides from enlarged fat cells.
