Abstract:

The present study aims to investigate the analgesic activity of the aqueous and ethanolic extract of Moringa oleifera in rats using hot plate methods. The extract were administered intraperitoneally at a dose of 25 mg/kg while diclofenac sodium served as standards. The aqueous and ethanolic extract exhibited significant analgesic activity in the hot plate model by increasing the reaction time of the rats time 15 sec at 30 min after treatment in comparison to control. Diclofenac sodium was shown more analgesic activity is compare with control and test. which showed significant results only at 45 and 60 min after treatment. In conclusion, the aqueous and ethanolic extract of Moringa oleifera displayed analgesic activity.

Key words: Moringa oleifera, . Diclofenac sodium, eddy's hot plate instrument etc.

INTRODUCTION:

Pain is an uncomfortable feeling that tells you something went wrong. It can be steady, throbbing, stabbing, aching, pinching or described in so many other ways. In another way pain is defined as the unpleasant sensation and emotional experience usually caused. It allows the body to react and prevent the further tissue damage.

Acute pain

- This type of pain is generally intense and short-lived. It is how the body alerts a person to an injury or localized tissue damage. Treating the underlying injury usually resolves acute pain.
- Acute pain triggers the body's fight-or-flight response, often resulting in faster heartbeats and breathing rates.

There are different types of acute pain:

- Somatic pain: A person feels this superficial pain on the skin or the soft tissues just below the skin.

Abstract:

Hypertension continues to be an important public health concern because of its associated morbidity, mortality and economic impact on the society. It is a significant risk factor for cardiovascular, cerebrovascular and renal complications. It has been estimated that by 2025, 1.56 billion individuals will have hypertension. The increasing prevalence of hypertension and the continually increasing expense of its treatment influence the prescribing patterns among physicians and compliance to the treatment by the patients. A number of national and international guidelines for the management of hypertension have been published. Since many years ago, diuretics were considered as the first-line drugs for treatment of hypertension therapy; however, the recent guidelines by the Joint National Commission (JNC8 guidelines) recommend both calcium channel blockers as well as angiotensin-converting enzyme inhibitors as first-line drugs, in addition to diuretics. Antihypertensive drug combinations are generally used for effective long-term management and to treat comorbid conditions. This review focuses on the antihypertensive medication utilization, their cost factors, adherence to treatment by patients, and physicians' adherence to guidelines in prescribing medications in different settings including Indian scenario. The antihypertensive medication prescribing pattern studies help in monitoring, evaluation and necessary modifications to the prescribing habits to achieve rational and cost-effective treatment. Additionally, periodic updating of recommended guidelines and innovative drug formulations, and prescription monitoring studies help in rational use of antihypertensive drugs, which can be tailored to suit the patients' requirements, including those in the developing countries.

Key words: Joint National Commission, Hypertension, calcium channel blockers, angiotensin-converting enzyme inhibitors, diuretics etc.

Introduction:

High blood pressure (hypertension) is a common condition in which the long-term force of the blood against your artery walls is high enough that it may eventually cause health problems, such as heart disease.

Blood pressure is the force exerted by circulating blood against the walls of the body's arteries, the major blood vessels in the body. Hypertension is when blood pressure is too high.

Blood pressure is written as two numbers. The first (systolic) number represents the pressure in blood

ABSTRACT:

Nature is the biggest source of medicines, whole over the world. A number of materials from plants, animals and minerals have been identified and used successfully for the treatment of various human ailments. CommiphoraMukul is a significant antiquated restorative plant of the Burseraceae family. Gum guggul (oleo-gum-resin) is obtained by making cut in bark of Commiphoramukul having a place with the family Burseraceae and is found widely in the dry districts of the Indian subcontinent. Guggul contain flavonoids, phytosterols and terpenes which are responsible for number of biological activities like anti-inflammatory, antiobesity, antineoplastic and antidiabetic. This review is mainly to update information regarding its pharmacological benefits of CommiphoraMukul.

KEYWORDS: Commiphoramukul, guggulsterone, anti-inflammatory activity, flavonoids, Obesity etc.

INTRODUCTION:

Commiphoramukul is also known as guggul tree and is largely located in drought areas of Pakistan, Bangladesh and India. The guggul tree is 4-6 feet tall, prickly, and free from foliage in the greater part of the year with debris hued papery bark that pieces off into papery drops, uncovering a green bark underneath creating fragrant gums of financial, restorative and social worth. It has additionally been portrayed as a bush. Branches are spirally rising, spinescent and youthful parts are glandular and pubescent. The leaves are for the most part compound, having only some species possessing simple leaves. Compound leaves are 1-3 foliate though pamphlets are sessile to sub-sessile, terminal ones the biggest, rhomboid to praise fit as a fiddle, unpredictably toothed edge, exchange phyllotaxy, horizontal handouts when present just not exactly a large portion of the size of the terminal ones. Glandular hairs are available on calyx,

ABSTRACT:-

Anxiety disorders are marked by excessive fear, often in response to specific objects or situations and in the absence of true danger and they are extremely common in the general population. According to a recent epidemiological study, the lifetime prevalence of any anxiety disorder is 28.8%. Anxiety disorders are associated with impaired workplace performance and hefty economic costs. The clinical applications of benzodiazepines as anxiolytic are limited by their side effects. The aim of the present study is to investigate the effects of aqueous and ethanol extracts of Benincasa hispida leaves. The method Involved was elevated plus maze test, light/dark test used. Results: In the elevated plus maze, aqueous and ethanol extracts (400mg/kg; p.o) showed an anxiolytic effect by increasing the percentage of time spent in open arms and the percentage of open arm entries as compared to control group.. In the light/dark transition test, aqueous extracts (400mg/kg; p.o) had increased the time spent in light area, latency to enter dark chamber and tunnel crossing. Whereas, ethanolic extract of (400mg/kg; p.o) has showed significant result. Conclusion: These results suggested that the extracts of Benincasa hispida leaves possessed anxiolytic effect in rats, in contrast to diazepam, had no inhibitory effect on locomotion in these tests, its side effect profile might be superior to the benzodiazepines.

Key words: Benincasa hispida leaves; Anxiolytic property; Elevated plus maze; light/dark test.
